Tech VS Everyone:

How long to a Billion Dollar Valuation?

What PE fund is likely to grow the fastest? The answer is Next.

Did you know it took Nike 24 years to reach a Billion dollar valuation?

There is a whole list of them: Harley Davidson, Whirlpool, Mattel (the makers of Barbie). Some of them took over 80 years.

How long does it take tech companies?

Instagram took 2 years to hit a Billion, Twitter took 3. What about the AI rising stars? We think that might be right around the corner.

Some on our list are already over a billion, and there is the potential for plenty of upside. The rising stars are poised for stardom sooner than you might think.

We created the Next AI Fund because we feel the entire sector is poised to grow aggressively.

Marathon Or Sprint?

The road to a Billion dollar valuation is not always long. Tech is shorter, but with AI it might be the shortest we have ever seen.

Fortunately, we have a fund for that.

Nike – 24 Years

Instagram – 2 Years

Starbucks – 24 Years

Twitter – 3 Years

Aside from the bigger names that may have gotten you here, we want to highlight the not-yet-billion-dollar-companies. If you see the value the way we do, well maybe you should be investing Next.

Nvidia

(Ticker: NVDA)

Fun Fact:

If you invested
$10K at the IPO
it would be worth
over $4M today

You Simply Cannot Miss
this Next AI
Move

You likely saw the move. Earlier in the year Nvidia was trading at about $150 per share. If you missed it, you might want to know what is Next.

If you took a profit off the table, well, you might want to know what is Next.

Either way, there is currently nothing like our new fund. With Next AI and the types of disruptive tech we are after, such moves are very possible. Demand is looking unprecedented, and we really hope to accommodate you.
